GOVERNOR'S RACE

There is every indication that the people of Virginia will witness a spirited race next year for the office of Governor. Four candidates are already in the field. The line-up would certainly indicate that a fine choice can be made from among these very capable men: Senator John Battle, Horace H. Edwards, Reuniie Arnold and Col. Miller.

Many voters and perhaps most of the political leaders will want to wait until the campaign hits full stride before making a commitment. That will probably be sound judgment. At this stage there is no indication of a "band wagon" movement toward any candidate. The voter occupies the driver's seat.

THERE'S A LIMIT

(Winchester Star)

Entrusted as it is with the task of defending the country against all possible contingencies and unforeseeable emergencies, the military establishment never has been modest in its demands on the United States Treasury. But in asking for $23 billion for the next fiscal year it seeks a proportion of the nation's resources that seems out of line with the country's ability to pay.

President Truman senses this fact and has ordered that the military budget be cut to $.4,400 000,000. Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, his economic adviser, is no less fearful of the effect upon America of giving the armed forces what they want. To grant their request, he says—or to give them much more than the $13,000,000,000 they are spending this year—would send the inflation spiral spinning upward and result in the imposition upon the country of all sorts of controls.

This, no doubt, will be the judgment of most economists. Except in the case of an actual war for survival, when naturally no sacrifice is too great to endure, this country cannot afford to devote so much of its substance to military preparedness that the civilian economy is unable to function.

Every billion dollars spent on defense is that much more money in circulation accompanied by greater shortage of labor and consequent goods and of course the unleashing of inflationary forces. All Americans want their country to be safe from military attack. But they also want it to keep from blowing up from within.

THE BROKEN CUP

(From The New York Times)

Most visitors to the Pacific Islands, especially Polynesia, have come away with the feeling that in overrunning these small areas and in imposing on their inhabitants his morals, his manners and his wars, the Westerner has destroyed something that was very precious and that he has not replaced with anything as good. Two recent writings by Navy officers have suggested that perhaps we can let these people revert to their old ways. Rear Admiral Carlton H. Wright, former Deputy Governor of Guam, expressed such sentiments in an article in the Saturday Evening Post and Capt. Walter Karig echoed them in a book.

There seems to us grave doubt that such a reversion is possible. Once a culture has been invaded, can it ever be restored? In her book, "Patterns of Culture," the late Dr. Ruth Benedict, Columbia University anthropologist, tells of a conversation she had with the leader of the Digger Indians of California. "In the beginning," she quotes him as saying, "God gave to every people a cup, a cup of clay, and from this cup they drank their life. They all dipped in the water but their cups were different. Our cup is broken now. It has passed away."

The white man has broken irreparably the cup from which the Polynesian, and the other island peoples, drank their life. Can Guam, Samoa, Funafuti, Kwajalein, Enivetok, Ivwo Jima and the other islands whose names became familiar to all Americans during the war revert to their eighteenth century ways, even if we are prepared to abandon them as military or naval bases, tear down all the ugly tin-roofed huts, dig up the unexploded shells? Will Bikini ever be the same again, after the atom bomb? The question the Westerner must answer—and that means primarily the American—is how well he is assuming the obligation to put something good in the place of what he has destroyed. Our Government, we believe, must give more thought and more attention to the future of the island peoples it governs than it has given thus far. The Eighty-first Congress should grant citizenship to the people of Guam and Samoa, should give them an organic Act that will protect their persons and their property, and should provide civilian, not military, government for them. If it does not act, then the President has the power to give them civilian rule without the consent of Congress. We cannot restore their broken cup. But we can give them a replacement that is better than anything they have now.

PEOPLE WANT HOUSING ACTION

(From Pittsylvania Tribune)

Spokesmen for builders and real estate men are already lamenting the fact that the 81st Congress may pass a long range housing bill. They see it as a threat to individual enterprise—another step down the road to state socialism.

They gloss over the cost of a public housing program such as that embodied in the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill and claim such an undertaking by the federal government would further add to the country's inflation problems.

These claims may be quite true and it is entirely possible the government entering the construction business may not be the solution to the housing problem.

But people have been waiting for homes ever since the war ended and the demand for low cost housing still exceeds the supply. They have been listening to the promises of private builders that the housing problem will be licked soon. This has been going on for over three years.

Veterans, in particular, do not believe private boulders have exerted every ecort to provide homes for everybody at a reasonable cost. They saw too many training camps and other feats of construction spring up virtually overnight during the war. Any country that can produce as it did in those days should be able to handle the housing problem, they believe. Excuses fall on deaf ears. They want action, not excuses.

There are still thousands of people living in overcrowded homes, doubled up with relatives.

These people want a roof over their heads. Whether or not a federal housing bill would help them get it is debatable, but they believe private business has failed to a certain extent. For that reason many people are demanding the federal government step in and take a crack at the problem. Whether or not this is the solution remains to be seen if and when a federal bill is passed.

HYBRIDS SHOW SUPERIORITY IN TEST

Five-year performance tests at 12 locations in Virginia have shown that hybrid of corn outyield open-pollinated by an average of 22½ per cent, and that adapted hybrid varieties up this figure to 27½ per cent, according to Dr. C. F. Genter, agronomist of the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station.

The tests are run in three general areas of the state—coastal, Piedmont and mountain, he explained. Information gained in the tests is used as a basis for corn varitel recommendations.

CO-OP WORKSHOP IS PLANNED IN STAUNTON

Dates for the annual Virginia Co-op Workshop have been set for February 9 and 10 in Staunton. Dr. G. H. Ward, agricultural economist at VPI announces.

The two-day conference of director, officers and key employees of farmer cooperatives will be held in the Stonewall Jackson hotel.

COMPOUNDS VALUELESS IN CURING HAY CROP

If you have hay or grain that has not molded or heated and you think it it's because you used one of the reportedly preventative compounds now on the market, you are probably wrong, says S. B. Fenne, plant pathologist at V. P. I.

You probably would have had good hay and grain without the compound, he says.

Letters in the Bible

Lesson for December 12, 1948

A LETTER in the mail! Those are exciting words. It was so when the Babylonians chipped open their dried clay envelopes. It is so when we rip the end off our paper envelopes. It was so when the marooned and homesick Timothy broke the seal on the papyrus notes that his old friend and teacher Paul sent him. Most letters reach the wastebasket, and we know that some of Paul's did. But fortunately his friends thought enough of about a dozen of his letters to save them and copy them and file them with some others and pass them around. And so we got more than a third of our New Testament, and perhaps a good deal more than a third of our theology.

Dr. Foreman

* * *

Yesterday in Television

THESE letters that have come down to us from so long ago are not only keenly interesting, they are immensely valuable. An honest informal letter is like an open window. We see into the writer's mind and life. we see the life of his times. Any historian feels lucky when he lights on a packet of old letters. Here is yesterday in television.

The letters of the New Testament, especially Paul's, are not propaganda literature. Paul was not writing for publication or for posterity. He would be bothered by a problem; he would think and pray about it, and then he would sit down and write about it.

However trivial the problem might seem, such as a local church quarrel, Paul never wrote trivially about it. He would pour out his mind on papyrus, usually dictating his letters to a secretary and sometimes so fast that the secretary obviously had a hard time keeping up.

If you want to know how an Apostle's mind worked, here it is. If you want to know how an inspired religious genius, one of the great of all time, planned and grieved and hoped and rejoiced, read these letters. Further, these letters televise for us the early Christian church. This is not a view of the church on parade, this is a glimpse of the church as it was "on the hoof," struggling, quarreling, ignorant, scarce one step removed from raw heathenism, and yet with the root of Christian faith in its heart, the seed of the great church that has grown up through the centuries.

* * *

Friend to Friend

THE letters in the New Testament are of various kinds. The letter to the Philippians from Paul was written, from prison, to some of his best friends. Recently they had sent him not only money but a man named Epaphroditus to stay with Paul and help him, Paul being in constant bad health. But Epaphroditus himself had fallen ill, and when he grew better he was still homesick.

Paul, generous as always, decided to send his sick friend home to convalesce, and by his hand sent the letter which the Philippian church loved, saved and copied, so that it eventually made its way into the New Testament collection.

There is some high theology in the letter; but there is also some warm human friendship, and some of the best advice Paul ever gave. It is in this letter we discover Paul's secret of happiness. I have learned (he wrote) in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content. (See chapter 4.)

When you read those paragraphs, simply glowing with happiness, remember they were written by a sick man, in jail, facing a serious charge on his forthcoming trial. Paul had actually discovered a joy which is trouble-proof.

* * *

Father to Sons

PAUL knew he would not live forever on this planet and could not live everywhere. So he spent much effort training helpers and successors. Some of these disappointed him sorely; but he was never disappointed in Timothy.

His letters to Timothy are personal, but they are more than that. They are advice from an older minister to a younger one, from a veteran missionary to a fresh recruit.

In 1 John we have another kind of letter, from an old, perhaps retired minister to a congregation he knows and loves. Again in 1 John the reader gets the impression of reading a family letter from father to sons and daughters.

Silent Night

The famous Christmas hymn, "Silent night, holy night," was written in Obendorf, one of Austria's loveliest villages, on Christmas Eve, 1818, by the local clergyman, who took the words to the home of the village organist the same night, where they were immediately set to the well-known tune.

Plants, Like Humans, Are Finicky Eaters

Isotopes Tell Amounts Of Fertilizer Utilized

Atomic scientists have learned that some plants, like some human beings, are finicky eaters.

This new knowledge, important commercially, is the result of exhaustive tests with radioactive isotopes of phosphorous in fertilizers.

Radioisotopes, sometimes called "tracers," are atoms whose nuclei emit high-energy rays that can be detected by sensitive instruments. Thus, the movement of substances containing such atoms may be followed or traced at all times.

Before radioisotopes were used, it was impossible to tell how much fertilizer a plant would absorb. But by using radioactive phosphorous in phosphate fertilizer, for instance, scientists know the amount each plant takes.

As a result, a scientist now can tell a farmer who spends $50 to put phosphate fertilizer on his land whether the plant only "nibbles" or takes a bite big enough to replay his expense.

During these experiments, scientists were surprised to discover that plants sometimes have distinct likes and dislikes for certain "meals."

For example, it was learned from tests in North Carolina that corn liked the phosphate from fertilizer for a time, then would switch to the phosphate which had been present before fertilization. In Maine, the potatoes preferred the fertilizer phosphate all the time.

In other cases, plants would seem always to prefer the phosphate already present in the ground, instead of the meal prepared by the farmer.

One of the world's foremost producers of baby foods, chewing gum, coffee and peanut-butter recently became the first representative of the food industry to become a member of the atomic research program at the University of Chicago.

Small Turkey Talk

The young lady poses a close-up on a very young turkey—one of the streamlined variety created to meet modern demands for small birds to suit small families and to fit kitchenette ovens. Each of several of the older varieties contributed one or more of the desired characteristics to this small white variety, characterized by a compact body, short legs, long keel and plenty of breast meat. Careful records on thousands of birds from carefully selected stock were necessary before the "apartment size" turkey was developed.

This man works on an extraction apparatus in Oak Ridge, Tenn., as part of the program for the nationwide distribution of beneficial radioactive isotopes from the uranium chain-reacting atomic pile.
